Ike To Sound Rally Call Missile Plan In State Of Union Report Inadequate, Defense Views

Hold Spotlight

WASHINGTON, Jan. 8 (A) -Amid clamor in Congress about the nation's defenses, President Eisenhower worked on a State of the Union message that could be as crucial as any in U.S. history.

The annual presidential report, to be delivered in person Thursday, will be the focus of attention because of a widespread belief the country is imperiled by Russia's scientific-military advances.

All signs indicated the President would strive to assure the free world that the U.S. defense position is not nearly as bad as some critics picture it, and that all needed steps will be taken to win the race with the Soviets.

Nixon Denies Soviet Stronger

The great argument on the subject continued and was typified by contrasting views:

1. Vice President Nixon declared it is unmitigated nonsense to say the United States is weaker than the Soviet Union.

2. Lt. Gen. James M. Gavin, sticking to his decision to quit, said the Army is rapidly deteriorating and "I can't get anything done" on certain proposals to

In delivering his message, Eisenhower will speak for perhaps 45 minutes beginning at 12:30 p.m. EST. His address will be televised and broadcast by all the major networks. The Senate and House will meet jointly to hear him.

Presidential messages on the State of the Union always take in a lot of territory, brushing over almost every topic of government, but this one is awaited mainly for what Eisenhower will say about

Problems Ahead For U.S. Colleges

American colleges this year are being called upon to accommodate 121,400 more students than in the 1956-57 academic year. In a country where the size of the average college's student body probably falls between 1,000 and 2,000, this indicates that the present year has added the equivalent of 100 colleges-more or less-to the

The second semester is expected to bring new enrollments that would fill two or three additional colleges.

The U.S. Office of Education at Washington places the present number of all college students in the country at slightly under 3.1 million. This is 45 per cent higher than were reported by the colleges in the fall of 1951, the lowest year in enrollments since World War II. The increase has come despite a gain of only 2 per cent in the number of young Americans of college age in the intervening years. The explanation may lie in the greater resources of the average family as well as the growing realization of the advantages of a college education.

The heavy demand placed upon the colleges and the rate at which births have been zooming since the mid-40s make it obvious that educators have not been far off in warning of the problems of the future. Moreover, it is likely that the years ahead will bring demand for even longer schooling in ever more complicated fields of knowledge.

The educators' problems, then, are only beginning. But if progress is to continue, it is ed" obvious that colleges must charge more for the services they render.

These Days

By George E. Sokolsky

A Difficult Life

oward Rushmore ended it all by killing his wife and himself. It was perhaps inevitable in the nature of his inner conflict. What brought such a person into e Communist Party? He was a boy of our Southern ountains but born in the North, at heart a hill-billy, oud of his colonial ancestry; he once witnessed a lynching which so disturbed his sensitive nature that he went through life seeking truth and justice, not as abstractions but as tangible, visible entities.

Naturally his disappointments were constant, almost daily. No friend measured up to Howard Rushmore's ideals; he himself was an enormous disappointment to himself, particularly in his later years when driven by kitchen economics to accept work where he could find it.

I have known so many ex-Communists who have suffered the buffets of life, at enormous sacrifice of means and dignity, and whose tribulations have been beyond human endurance. For having cut their ties with their old comrades, they were really never altogether accepted by a suspicious society which constantly asked how and why they joined the Communist Party in the first place.

Howard Rushmore was never a theoretician; he never really knew why he joined the Communist Party except that as a product of the Depression, he sought social justice. A Southerner, he hated racial discrimination; a son of the Bible Belt, he was violently anti-religious. He found a berth in the "Daily Worker" as a movie critic-a lowly job in which he was expected to take orders, not to think. He quit over "Gone With the Wind," which he thought was wonderful, whereas the party line was to damn it. Howard refused to write the damnation.

After he left the party, he became an anti-Communist specialist for the New York Journal-American. His work was not always taken at his own valuation as to its importance, but this can be said of it that he was the first one to make a full time job of reporting on the Communist movement. He and Frederick Woltman specialized in this field and both established means to watch party activities almost like a police force. In fact, these reporters knew more about what was going on inside the movement than all government agencies except the FBI. Rushmore. however, never emerged beyond reporting; the whys and wherefores he could not grasp.

Anti-Communism can become an obsession like any other specialty. Furthermore, news of the American Communist movement became decreasingly important as our problems with Soviet Russia increased. Compared with the big boys working out of Moscow, the American Communists were and are actually small punks, an extension of Soviet espionage and infiltration but rarely with the truly great jobs against this country, the most important of which are developed by Russia's detour method in other countries, as, for instance, the effort to destroy a phase of the American economy by liquidating our investments in the Middle Whereas Howard Rushmore was an expert on American Communism, he possessed no expert knowledge of Communist theory or its historic development. Therefore, he did not grow in his work. He was employed for a short time by the McCarthy Committee where again he misunderstood the nature and function of the committee. He could not work with others.

And so he quarrelled with many of his old anti-Communist friends, of whom he felt that they had failed to appreciate his competence and knowledge. Embittered he landed on "Confidential" magazine, a place where he did not belong by principle, by ideals, by habits of life. He became defensive and therefore obstreperous. He hated that job and he hated the kind of people he had to meet. He originally thought that he might have been able to use this magazine to forward the anti-Communist cause. He failed, of course, and eventually was reduced to the ugliness of testifying against himself, of humiliating himself in public.

Howard Rushmore was a sad, mountain boy, morose, looking for something he never could find. He might have been a poet; he might have been a prophet. He ended up a neurotic, frightened man for whom life had come to mean nothing. As a friend said: "He had not the will to live." He had not.

Ike To Start Another Shakeup In Guided Missile Department

portant purge is due in the Eisenhower guided missile department. This time it's missile czar William Holaday who is getting out. To replace him, the administration is trying to entice Carter Burgess, former Assistant Secretary of Defense and former president of Trans World Airlines. Burgess had a good record in both the Defense Department and TWA, but finally crossed wires with TWA owner Howard Hughes.

What answer does Congress usually make to criticisms about its negligence? The customary response is that the Executive should furnish the "leadership" and that, if the Russians get ahead of us on "Sputniks," the Administration in power is at fault. Certainly the incumbent party is responsible for recommendations but under the Constitution the Senate and House have the primary responsibility for writing legislation and appropriating funds. Just a year ago Congress was in an economy mood and was cutting national defense expenditures right and left. A budget of $71.8 billion was considered a terrible extravagance. But today the Democrats are getting ready to argue that maybe $74 billion, which the President is about to propose, is not enough.

What the United States needs more than anything else today in public life is an infusion of selflessness. The everybody-forhimself doctrine which dominates the economic situation and also the political factionalism here are not going to solve anything. When the leaders of both parties begin to demand that there be an end to political bickering over defense and foreign policy and when the so-called "insurgents" cause we didn't like taxation and headline-seekers begin to be criticized by their own party leaders for their irresponsible utterances, some sort of effective discipline will be achieved. Congress may then come back in public esteem to serve the people and help create throughout the country an "attitude of sustained and informed determi-

Frankie Costello And Taxes

A new police-state method of using income taxes to pry into the lives of prospective jury members has New York attorneys up in Income taxes are supposed to be sacred and private. It is a penitentiary offense for any tax official to leak information regarding tax returns. Up until the time of Senator McCarthy's investigations this also applied to other government agencies.

However, when Frank Costello, onetime king of the gambling world, came up for trial for income-tax evasion in New York, his attorney, alert Edward Bennett Williams, suspected that the government had been probing into the tax records of jurors. He asked some blunt questions, and U.S. District Judge Francis X. McGohey ruled that he could get the answers - despite strenuous ebjections by government attor-

Williams found that the Justice Department had asked the Treasury for the tax returns of 200 prospective federal jurors and examined them to see whether they were favorable to the government, whether they had high or low incomes, etc. On the basis of these returns, government attorneys classified prospective jurors and managed to select for the jury eight favorable to the government. The jury convicted Costello

Note-This writer was probably the first newspaperman to expose some of Frankie Costello's operations back in 1945. Since then Costello has been convicted on several counts. However, I for one do not believe he should be convicted with police-state methods. In addition, Costello is getting old, is no longer a power in the gambling world, has probably suffered enough.

In Memoriam

In loving memory of our dear husband, brother and son, Melvin Lee Osbourne, who died 4 years ago, January 9, 1954 Sad and sudden was the call Of one so dearly loved by all

A bitter grief, a shock severe
It was to part with one so dear. It was to part with one so dear.
We often sit and think of you,
And speak of how you died.
To think you could not say goodbye,
Before you closed your eyes.
For all of us did your best,
Oh God, grant you "Eternal Rest."
Sadly missed by Wife, Mother, Sisters, Brothers & friends.
